A clothes retailer imports a shipment of children’s clothing by sea from the Far East for sale in their UK stores. Whilst in transit, the cargo ship suffers a collision which damages some of the cargo, including the retailer’s shipment. The cargo has to be offloaded, temporarily stored and then reloaded on to a new vessel to complete its journey to the UK. The marine cargo policy covers the damage to the clothing, as well as the costs incurred in the additional storing and reloading of goods mid-journey, ensuring the business can continue trading with minimal financial impact.

HERE ARE 10 REASONS YOUR CLIENTS MAY NEED MARINE CARGO INSURANCE.

01 THERE CAN BE HIGH COSTS FOLLOWING A LOSS
The cost of losses arising from physical damage to goods in the event of an accident during transit can run into hundreds of thousands of pounds. Marine cargo cover protects a business from these costs.

02 COVER IS WIDER THAN A TRADITIONAL GOODS IN TRANSIT POLICY
A marine cargo policy will typically cover goods against a wider range of perils than a goods in transit policy. It may also provide extensions such as control over the disposal of branded goods.

03 MARINE CARGO COVERS GOODS WORLDWIDE
A goods in transit policy typically covers the goods whilst in transit within the UK. A marine cargo policy can cover transits worldwide via any means of transport, giving true warehouse to warehouse cover.

04 HAULIER’S LIABILITY INSURANCE MAY NOT PROTECT A BUSINESS’ CARGO
A haulier will restrict their legal liability for damage caused to goods whilst in their control, with strict limits often stipulated by their trade association. So even if damage is their fault, the compensation available will often be insufficient.

05 GOODS ARE PROTECTED Whilst IN STORAGE
A marine cargo policy can provide cover for goods before and after transit whilst being kept in a warehouse or other storage facility.

06 MARINE CARGO COVER IS OFTEN A COMMERCIAL REQUIREMENT
Sales made with a letter of credit, such as when financed by a bank or loan, may require proof of marine cargo insurance. Not insuring the goods may place unnecessary strain on commercial relationships.

07 WAR AND TERRORISM COVERS ARE INCLUDED AS STANDARD
Whether under an all risks policy or a more traditional marine cargo policy, war and terrorism cover is usually included as standard, so a business doesn’t need to purchase separate policies.

08 PROTECTED AFTER A GENERAL AVERAGE INCIDENT
If a vessel is at risk of being lost, part of the ship or cargo may be sacrificed to prevent a total loss. General average dictates all parties contribute to the loss, and cargo insurance ensures a business’ contribution is covered.

09 MARINE CARGO POLICIES ARE ASSIGNABLE
As the policy typically covers the entire journey of the goods, the benefit of the policy can be ‘assigned’ from the seller of the goods to the buyer, when the buyer becomes the legal owner during the journey.

10 ANNUAL OR SINGLE TRIP COVER
If cover is only required for a one-off trip, a business doesn’t need to purchase an annual policy. A single trip policy means a business will get the cover it requires, only when it’s needed.
